Cover Story

The rising aspirations of electricity consumers for uninterrupted supply at low prices coupled with an increase in the proportion of newer and highly unpredictable renewable generation infeeds are causing severe stress to the utility managers. The changes in all areas of the energy grids, from generation to transmission to distribution, affect the structure and operation of power grids, which can only be managed efficiently with the applications of energy automation.

Letters to Editor

Dear Editor,

I have been reading IEEMA journal since ages and always find the articles very informative. Congratulations to you on being able to bring about a new topic every time. Let me also confess that every time I get hold of an IEEMA journal, it is not the articles on electrical industry that I have a look first. It's usually the motivational quotes and the humorous inserts from Mr. Keswani that I read first. I request you to include more topics / articles on non - industrial subjects. This will add flavor to our journal and could also improve the circulation. It could be a proper balance of both industry related topics and topics on various subjects which could add value to our professional as well as personal life.

All the best.
